Teaching Experience

06/01-Current Assistant/Association Professor of Social Work

Social Work 3013. Human Behavior in the Social Environment.

A junior/senior level course designed for social work, psychology, and education students but also offered to outside disciplines as an elective. Using traditional lectures, I have designed progressively ambitious versions of this course to challenge students to produce high-quality writing that acknowledged diverse audiences and privileged ethical social work practice.

Social Work 3003. Social Work with Populations at Risk.

A junior/senior level course designed to introduce critical thinking and application toward populations at risk. I designed the course to focus on student's self-analysis and development regarding social work practice with gays, lesbians, AIDS survivors, populations of color, and the elderly. In-class discussions emphasize practice and intervention strategies.

Social Work 3213. Introduction to Social Work Research/Research Methods

Junior/senior level course designed to introduce social work students to the basic concepts of social work research, statistics and statistical methods. In-class and computer lab activities were designed to assist students in the process of writing a research proposal.

SW 2313 Introduction to Social Work

Junior level course designed to introduce lay students to the profession of social work, history of the profession, value base of the profession, and theoretical frameworks used in micro, macro, and mezzo practice.

Social Work 3113. Recording Guidelines for Social Workers

Summer 2002

Junior Level class designed to introduce social work students to proper methods of documentation and to improve overall writing ability. Classroom discussions and activities focused on documentation of social work activity, continuity of services, payment from their party payers, quality control, statistical reporting, supervisory reviews, organizing the worker's thoughts, interdisciplinary communication, part of an eligibility record, teaching, research.
